

Hi everyone. I hope you've been managing to keep busy in this wet weather! Luckily, it is going to dry up this week. So the water and warm weather should work together nicely to help the plants and my new grass grow.

You'll never guess what has happened under our new turf...whilst we were preparing the ground last week, we had patted down the ground and made sure it was a flat surface. One morning, we looked at the soil and noticed a little lump of soil...I thought I must have dropped a bit of soil but the next day there was another lump! It turns out that we have a mole who has decided to use our lovely new soil to try and find delicious things to eat! Pippa thinks she can dig down and find it! And Dan is VERY unimpressed!

Dan and I had a bit of a celebration at our house this weekend. It was supposed to be our wedding (although it would have been a very wet day)! So it turns out you won't have to learn to spell Middleton after all-I'll be Miss Clayton for another year! I felt a bit grumpy about it all last week, but then on Saturday my friends surprised me with lots of lovely gifts and kind words (I am particularly excited to play the monopoly card game). I ended the day feeling very lucky and thankful! Someone even baked us a 'wedding cake', although Leo doesn't know about weddings so when he tasted some he kept calling it birthday cake!

Take care everyone. x
